ABSTRACT

A data transmission method for a packet-like data format with a control section and a following data section. When transmitting the packet-like data format, the data rate is switched between the control section and the data section by a control instruction transmitted in the control section. This increases the data rate for the data section in comparison to the data rate of the control section.